The function and value is defined by you

Hosted Microsoft SharePoint® can do so many things; for some businesses it's a file sharing system with advanced versioning and security features. Others use it to establish an intranet for collaboration among employees, or an extranet to share information with supply chain partners. The bottom line, SharePoint is a secure and flexible tool that you can shape to a wide range of business purposes, including:

Sharing and managing documents and information

Create sites to share and manage key documents online, to track document versions and to assure the latest versions are always accessible.

Protecting and preserving critical documents and information

Use document-level permissions to protect sensitive information.

Extending your communications reach

Use SharePoint® hosting services to create an extranet—allowing access to unlimited visitors from the internet, or to enable sharing of information internally within the organization as well as externally with customers and selected vendors and partners.

Improving collaboration and project management

Create project sites to give project teams a shared environment for collaborating, from start to finish, on documents, tasks and events. Microsoft SharePoint® Online integrates with Outlook so users can check out and edit SharePoint site documents when offline.

Simplifying the management and search of large volumes of information

Use SharePoint as a platform for digital record management systems that meet government and industry compliance standards. As an enterprise search tool for your business, it provides an interactive, visual search experience with visual cues to help people find information quickly, and refiners to let them drill into the results and discover insights.

Marketing your business

Designed with small businesses and professionals in mind SharePoint websites are easy to set-up and maintain—making it easier to market your business.
